English Preface

Lovoang Kaala Maxat La Sam is a translation of the New Testament and Psalms into the Madak language of Papua New Guinea. The Madak live in the central area of the New Ireland Province. There are approximately 5500 speakers of this language.

This book includes several extra features designed to help the reader better understand the message of the New Testament and Psalms. Each book has an introduction that tells a little bit about the author, and explains the situation that caused the book to be written. These are written from a conservative theological point of view. Parallel passages are noted after section headings, especially in the Gospels. Cross references are placed at the bottom of the page with the verse that is being cross-referenced in bold print. Abbreviations used in the parallel passage references and cross references can be found on the following pages. The English titles are also included. At the end of the book are included a list of the Messianic Psalms, a glossary of key New Testament terms, a topical index, and a set of maps.
