3. The following are some of the most common types of errors that can occur when using a calculator:

a. Rounding errors: When you round a number, you lose some of its precision. This can lead to errors in calculations, especially if you round too early or too often.

b. Order of operations errors: Calculators follow a specific order of operations (PEMDAS) to perform calculations. If you don't enter your expression correctly, you may get an incorrect result.

c. Parentheses errors: Using parentheses incorrectly can change the order of operations and lead to errors.

d. Fraction errors: Some calculators have a fraction mode, but it's important to understand how to use it correctly to avoid errors.

e. Mode errors: Making sure you're in the correct mode (e.g., decimal vs. fraction) is crucial for getting accurate results.
