English Preface

Urana Xuana is a translation of the New Testament into the Mato language of Papua New Guinea. The Mato live on the northern coast of Morobe Province. There are approximately 1250 speakers.

This book includes several extra features designed to help the reader better understand the message of the New Testament. Each book has an introduction that tells a little bit about the author, and explains the situation that caused the book to be written. Parallel passages are noted after section headings, especially in the Gospels. Cross references are placed at the bottom of the page with the verse that is being cross-referenced in bold print. Abbreviations used in the parallel passage references and cross references can be found on the following pages. The Tok Pisin titles are also included. At the end of the book are a key terms glossary, a topical index, and a set of photos and maps.
